The age for using social media in full should be 25 which is the age of reason. For ages 18-25, social media should be limited for.

Social media has shown the capability to work. It should not have been run by Mark Zuckerberg, Elon Musk etc. and their teams. They cannot do the job of running social media at all.

I don’t believe social media is anywhere near what it is described as by the public. There isn’t much offered on social media, it is discussed yearly.

On these social media pages for housing, employment, events, you can make them nearly opposite of what they are. Often, pages will advertise their pages that way.

The whole point of social media is to share others content to see who can get the most likes. I compare it to a videogame. The content with the most likes is the content that “stands out” the most. Social media is mostly for clicks.

To get famous on social media, someone has to be a relatable person, the person also has to figure out what content people on social media want to watch. Aba N Preach are an example who can understand this.

What is serious about social media influencers is that they cannot lose their job as a social media influencer. If a politician does a terrible job, the politician is voted out. In most instances, the social media influencers don’t lose their fanbase.

Social media influencer should not be a salaried job.

Social media only shows the highlight. A portion of social media is fake.

On social media, famous social media influencers and activists are flooded on the platforms. The social media influencers and activists put out videos and post often.

Social media is redundant, much of it is people explaining why they believe their beliefs are better than someone else’s.

Social media is not making people “dumb” which Candance Owens has claimed. The people who spend all day on TikTok watching shorts were not that smart to begin with.

Social media requires no education for the influencers and those they will influence on it. This is more reason why social media cannot be run by Mark Zuckerberg, Elon Musk, etc.

The social media influencers have a shared oligopoly where each social media influencer share each other’s posts responding to a feminist as example. The social media influencers at the top study feminism to explain what is wrong with feminism. Because of this, they get more influence. The social media influencers keep talking about feminism because they want to stick on topics that their fanbases want to hear them respond to. The social media influencers at the top are looking for more content to share with other social media influencers to respond to. Their fanbases grow doing this at a rapid rate. If you were friends with some of the social media influencers at the top, this would grow a social media channel you would set up at a fast rate.

They will push more social media and pot, once they are abused, people will look elsewhere for self-gain, it's only a matter of time since pot was made legal in America. All your favorite sports players like Kevin Durant will push it onto the public.

Social media is done for clicks and ratings. It is not done for a fanbase. Social media may be mostly for reactions, it may not be for a message at all in videos on it.

With social media, there is so much build up for such minor articles. There is so much anticipation. This can be bad because the major articles could get overlooked by the public. This is a new concept; it is being misused by the public to a high degree.

There is no shortage of podcasts and streams. The podcasters could run one every day with different guests that are famous and there are many famous people in America. A streamer can run a stream and play videogames during it.

People don't have the courage to say these kinds of things to each other's face, so they use the internet to get people to say them. These Twitter stars try to get them all wild up. From personal experience there are some things I can't say, probably because of my upbringing. Social media is abused.

Be careful sharing about what you think will be future wars, keep it very simple when talking about and never post your views on this on social media ever. Unless it is dire, do not call for a revolution. A dire example being Ukraine where the country is in shambles and has failed where any alternative would be better.

Social media is there for someone to be reinforced with their beliefs through video after video.

The public is passionate about their social media accounts.

Much of the public wants to start a podcast on social media. Most people are not qualified to have a podcast. The demand for starting a podcast is unheard of.

People who delete their social media because they want to go in hiding and do not want any drama but will gladly tell you all day long about what they believe to try to bring you down, it’s unreal.

On social media, many of the videos that are viral have the famous YouTubers having facial expressions on the video showing how someone in the video they are commenting on is dumb or doesn’t make sense. This is on more YouTube videos each year.

The want to keep pleasing their friends through social media, they don’t want fame, they just want to make their friends happy, it must stress them out so much having to keep trying to short videos, different social media platforms to reach each friends somehow between over at least 50 friends.

You are only shown the highlights of social media. The social media influencers may have a life that looks fulfilling when it is not.

Society wants to tell you how amazing you are and all these things to inflate you, so you crash at a young age. Think of social media where people have to keep showing up from place to place to place keeping their status high.

In the future, you will see more celebrities try to get banned from social media platforms to get more attention.

What does someone gain from being a fan of a social media influencer? Social media influencers want their fanbase to copy them.

It is difficult to become famous on social media.

The YouTube channels that are meant to insult others, much of their audience watches YouTube channels including Andrew Schulz, Ethan Klien, Aba N Preach, Hasan Piker, Steven Crowder. There is an audience that watches channel after channel of it. This is something that is a lot to discuss with.

Most of the social media influencers are famous for their sarcasm when it comes to insulting the other party be it liberal or American conservative.

The social media influencers often fake their reactions to social media videos they respond to. The social media influencers know many of the videos they respond to are false and are to influence others where the person who put out the video doesn’t support the beliefs they put out. An example of a social media influencer who fakes his reactions is Brandon Tatum.

On social media, there are many videos with music when someone is talking about something political. I am not sure why those who make their videos do this since it is done so often.

People think their life isn't that great because all they see is people with a better life on social media.

The next generation will have their source of learning be from social media influencers. I have written out how bad it can be for the public; I don't see the benefit in social media influencers at all.

Someone who is famous on social media can steal what someone else says to relate it to something they are discussing on a podcast. Someone who is famous on social media can then try passing it off as if they may have come up with it.

Social media influencers record their entire day for their fans to watch.

One thing I noticed is that social media keeps reinforcing what people believe or talking about their problems for sympathy. This is going to ware on people and tire them out quickly.

With social media, there is so much from the content creators. They will give their viewers so many takes on their beliefs. This is added with their social media accounts such as X where their account has over 46k tweets. I don't know what to think of this.

I have already spelled this out, but people will be more and more invested in what they believe. They will find new ways to put themselves out there and be more democrat, more conservative, more religious etc. They will go to more events, talk about it more on social media etc. Most people in society will be activists.

The way to get followers on social media is to post people sending bad mail, activism, or posting disturbing videos of what the public is doing. More people are going to post material like this do not understand that society needs to stay intact and not keep giving people reason to lose hope in what society does. People will just look for more and more messed up material all day. Watching it all day will corrupt their character, it won't happen overnight but over the span of years. It may seem innocent to them, but their characters will worsen gradually.

All this social media does is make for people to have bigger ambitions to the point where they want others to think the way they think with their ideology. All of it is political, they won't educate in the future, it will be about who feels right, not what is correct. There will be no time to learn, they will only be taught about the party they vote for, that’s something you do in your own time.

They will keep using these words like empowerment, self-betterment, liberation to lure people. It will worsen and get deeper with people doing more for their ideology. The deeper someone gets with the ideology the more fame they get on social media. It may seem innocent, but it’s not. They will keep inspiring people.

To put this in perspective, there were many Youtubers who made a career from making videos and streaming. However, that was for their fanbase. That was not for social media influence.

Social media decides what people think and their friends reinforce it. The youth are raised by social media, those are their heroes.

The prices for the top-rated tickets at concerts and sports games will go up because of social media where it is shared to be at it.

Subscribers can come through shorts on YouTube so it does not matter who ahs the most subscribers anymore.

Facebook marketplace is full of products that are far overpriced. I could have never imagined a website that sells used products far overpriced.

Social media influencers will celebrate events on social media that they are not a part of. A social media influencer will celebrate a protest in Taiwan, a protest in Argentina, and a protest in South Korea as example.

Social media gives the idea that people’s lives are without challenges in them. An example of how social media is not realistic.

People in society want to keep updating where they are at during all times for people on social media to watch. I don’t understand this at all.

There will be shorter social media video responses which leads to a shorter attention span where the viewers will expect people to get their point across as quickly as possible. A 1-minute video is not enough to explain a serious matter meaning you have gotten nothing out of watching the video presented. This will dumb down the earth.

There is so much material on social media that is unnecessary that people respond to, then there is new material that people on social media respond to.

People are going to get tired of their lives being told that working a 9-5 isn’t a fulfilling life. What could happen is that they give up on everything meaning even messed up content on social media won’t cause them to bother with anything where they become so dull and not engaged in anything where they can’t find much purpose in life.

At 23 years old, the social media fame is going to be so high for those of the highest tier. It will get out of control.

I find it noteworthy that on social media, traveling gets some of the highest ratings. In 2024, ravel costs are at the highest.

People believe with more money, more things to do, you live a more fulfilling life. The rappers got it right here, more money more problems now you have places to attend you have to keep your status up. It’s no wonder why so many people use social media all day, they have to attend to places for it.

People won’t take things for what they are in the future. They are going to keep aspiring more for others to where other people’s lives will be their priority. All they will think about is how the other person could do much better. This means they won’t even live concerning themselves with what others do and believe. They won’t utilize their time, all they will see is parties, social media etc.

Social media is getting the public more energetic, which is misused by the public.

The teenagers who are on social media all day with the only goal of being famous thinking they will find it, they will crash at a younger age and because these teenage girls were propped up so much getting the attention they wanted so badly from guys and girls, this will only hurt them so much harder since now by 21 they had too much joy in life they couldn’t handle constantly getting fame and they don’t have professionals to teach them on how to manage the stress it would bring anyone. There can be a new fight for “fame” in the next generation, yet the fact will be hidden that the original generation that did such had crashed maybe the youngest possible age of any generation known to mankind. The younger people are to crash, what will happen is they cannot handle it having that kind of stress at 21!

I notice with the atheist social media channels it is the same stuff they talk about and there are so many! They run out of stuff to talk about after two weeks’ worth of channel videos.

Social media is all bad because most of the influencers are bad role models on it. Also, I think it is only to get attention and applause from fans they have never met before. What people get out of social media TikTok and SnapChat the example I use are for dopamine hits alone. That’s not beneficial nor a good use of time, that's entertainment. Social media will grow and grow.

Social media is hindering people's social skills badly. What it also is doing is making people far more active, getting them to do a good amount of more activities and going places. All these videos made saying that social media is making people miss out on their lives proved not to be true.

All social media and TV is doing is having sex far more accessible. By talking about dating and relationships on social media, it makes people want sex more and more since it is all people are talking about. The people who you sleep with, that improves your status in North America and Europe and boyfriend girlfriend relationships are very accessible so a guy or girl can keep trying until they get the guy or girl that raises their status. In the meantime, they are already in a relationship or going clubbing. This is part of the elite's agenda to hypersexualize the world. Because of people's DM's, they can easily ask someone out and hit them up for sex. 20 years ago, it was much harder to get a date.

Because people want experiences they will keep trying new things or ones already tried that are terrible ideas thinking it will bring them joy. That's why you see all these strange social media videos and pro Ukraine material they think it will bring them joy, yet it doesn't.

All the smartphones will give people short videos of people acting silly. The last thing smart phone is going to give are videos of people teaching reason. The influencers on it you can't listen to. You have to read books. The videos aren't educational at all, not one of them. I can't help but laugh. Here I was thinking they give insight on life. They are just parodies, that's all they are. Their goal is just to make this short statement of I'm right you're wrong with what you do. They don't even describe why they believe they are right they don't need a needed response, why you are wrong for posing them a question for instance. It's no wonder why on YouTube there all these response videos are showing why people on the internet are wrong with the statement they are trying to make. Soon that will be all YouTube is. YouTube I can barely remember back in 2009 had nothing in common. It was about content creation to try to entertain you and to get you to think critically. Not used to remind you this other person on the internet is wrong. These short videos are just to get a reaction out of you not to get you to think. It amazes me how low the content really is on social media where people keep sending out video after video with nothing in it. I will give the internet this that the podcasts are good, but you have to seek the good ones. They aren't amazing though, so it doesn't make up for all the overwhelming amount of waste on social media. You can call people on social media silly, dramatic, they do not care one big. You're not even viewed as a hater or jealous in their minds, they think it is approval. Back in my day in 2008 on the internet that was a strong insult people would not accept being called. Overall, we are far better off without social media, there is no need for it.

Worcester networks a lot but they don't get along in person, yet they don't delete each other from their social media.

In America they create a problem. Their officials want us to talk about it with therapists. Their officials also want our opinion to be posted on social media, talked about in person with others, and voted for.

All social media is a job. I knew a rapper who told me his fans wanted more music and better ones. The same works with Twitter, people want "better" tweets. Is it worth the following, are you enjoying it? With 50k tweets, are you sure you don't want your time back?

On social media, there are many shorts of the history of movies for instance. However, the accounts that are in the higher or top tier get almost all the views for their shorts. The rest of the accounts get 4k views at most regardless of the movie they are talking about in the short they make. Some social media accounts can get a decent portion of the views; however, the views are the same for each short they put out.

All social media is activism to "lead the cause" meaning to rally people as far as possible to spread their message as much as possible to make it the biggest message possible. This is done all day through social media through so many influencers who have accounts. Twitter being the worst offender of this by far. All you are on social media is just a random person expecting respect from me for your views I do not care for.

Every year it is more and more gossip through all these social media platforms. More friends more responsibility. The more putting yourself out there. More time dedicated to others. That's how social media is making lives more stressful.

Most of the time people don't find what you share with them on social media funny or entertaining, yet it is done so much.

With social media, small clips of the debate is reposted on social media. It doesn't connect. It doesn't help the person who reposts the short clips learn debate or understand the debate. What also happens is the short clip of the debate is too short and cuts off the counter argument to what someone responds with.

All social media has done is compete on how to live the best life so people keep chasing it and they keep making their lives seem better than it actually is. What this does is make people want to live better and better lives trying every method possible. When they don't succeed at it since most fail, they then claim to be depressed. One paragraph sums up this dynasty that 63.5 percent of the world is on all day.

If you want to get famous on social media, film your reactions on social media like you being excited after a team scores a touchdown film the whole stadium cheering. Try to think of something big and short. People don't want long videos anymore. Try to find some place you think is amazing that people love to go to. Maybe a person you met at a church or a workplace and caption it talking about how great of a person the other person is meaning what he believes and his values.

This is also how to get famous on social media- get a girlfriend/wife that is at least somewhat attractive, post short videos with music of you dancing, talk about sex/ your sex life (you cannot do), open several social media accounts on different platforms platform whichever platforms you want not just one account on one, talk about knowledge on material such as psychology, make a podcast about "self-betterment", start gossip with other YouTube channels (I'd avoid that), talk about politicians what you like and don't like about them, talk about anything worldly life, have some sort of a character that others will like, speak highly about famous people like Joe Rogan (you cannot do), be in a good enough shape, appeal to the youth by making them look up to you as some sort of hero, show that you have all these interests with all of these hobbies, show that you are in no way racist (this is key), speak highly of all religions, have a decent amount of knowledge which you would have much of given that you are over 21, buy a nice home to show off which is very important, any state you live in works, show you are down to earth, show that you work out in some way, post inspirational quotes, be an activist to at least a small degree, take so many photos of yourself that are photoshopped, have a sense of humor, support animals in some way, make music, share what kinds of music you like, talk a lot about "self-improvement", get other famous people to support you, sell clothing of your brand, be in many different fields discussing different topics, be creative, always be smiling, be professional, be at least a decent amount "controversial" whatever that looks like, have a song that people recognize is your "theme", show that many women who are famous speak highly of the content you put out, the list goes on.

This is what gets the most views on social media. I specifically wrote which are bad to show what is going on: gun interests (yikes), pornography of yourself, food videos (I guess that's not terrible for society), prank videos that are almost illegal, gossip videos all day, politics on twitter, activism of any kind (you already know how I feel about this), video game channels, feminist content (yikes), extremely dark humor comedy (horrific), joining the lgbt (guess about this if it is bad or not), music (that's not too bad except for rap which is yikes), mental health (yikes) picking a religion to make videos to attack another religion (yikes), far right or far left content (serious but maybe yikes),going on websites like Omegle posting videos sending death threats to people who don't like you, bodybuilding (terrible for both men and women maybe yikes can't pick one or the other), showing off your serious wealth (not too bad but does generate hate), sports channels (no issue there at all maybe a slight add to the problem), beauty for women (not sure here but nothing more than not too bad), this would be the whole list maybe I forgot a thing or two. You and I both know how detrimental I'd say 90% of this will destroy any society if done in masses. The youth spend at least 8 hours a day on a smart phone, we know what this will do in the future.

Social media is detrimental to the younger generations because they will keep competing seeing what others buy so they will buy material on credit.

Most of social media is staged where it is read off a script for shorts if you ask me.

Social media makes people have higher standards. I have seen this often with social media influencers.

Social media makes people want more material since it is more advertising.

All social media does for those who misuse it make people want more attention to a degree that is high.

Because of all the social media, people are unable to have conversations because all they type is lol and haha short messages. This means they don't feel they are understood. This means their lives are getting worse each generation, but the public doesn't know that.

People talk about news, politics, and religion all through social media. But then when you see them in person, they may say one or two sentences on it. Then when I join in, they look at me like "James are you ok? We only talk religion for two sentences." It shows how social media is wasteful.

In the future, there will be argument after argument over minor beliefs. These arguments will go on for days on social media and the youth will claim to be "bullied" by others for it. It will get very rough on the teens.

Shouldn't there be warning labels on social media on how to use it so not only will you get fed up but also more importantly about to not watch it all day long to take breaks from it, so you do not get angry from it. How would someone know this when teens are on social media all day long?

I can spend 14 hours on social media in one day. It wouldn't make me angry, stressed, sad, ruin my focus, lethargic etc. The public doesn't know how to use social media correctly.

On social media, the crazier the material, the more views the video gets. The same with the sillier the material.

To all the social media influencers, where are your results? Why are they hidden from the public? This would show a high rate of failure.

86% of young Americans want to be a social media influencer, that is unfortunate.

From what I have seen, most of these social media influencers are equal to or worse than the Hollywood celebrities they condemn.

What is on social media accounts on websites like TikTok in America, Canada, and Europe. It will be exported worldwide. This means these countries' citizens will influence many people around the world.

Social media influencers such as Joe Rogan believe they are better than the public because they have a large fanbase consisting of only randoms. What does this prove?

I don't understand how everyone records an event. Only one person has to record the event and then share it with everyone on social media. You don't need 20 different recordings of the same event.

It will be interesting in 25 years what the most popular influencers on the internet will present as where they get views from it. If social media influencers were for adults as a form of entertainment, there would be no issue at all. The social media influencers want to target teens.

One note about shorts is that there are shorts with different people speaking on the same matter with their perspective on the matter. The shorts take videos from other shorts found on social media platforms. First, is that the short could have been in it who spoke on a matter, but it was taken out of context. Second, the short could have people speaking who misspeak on a matter without knowledge of it along with others who speak on a matter that have knowledge on it. This makes the video not knowledge based. It would only take on person in a short of over 3 in it.

Social media could be making the public physically sick to their stomach from the influx of sweets and liquor found on videos that go viral.

Videos and shorts on social media will be cited for documents. Most videos and shorts in today's world are for social media influence. Videos and shorts like these are not professional. I don't believe they cannot be used for citation given the low quality.

Social media influencers who are in the highest tier of views will be billionaires. That's how big social media will become.

Social media will get crazier since the crazier the videos, the higher the views.

The social media influencers give such little insight about themselves, this is off when social media influence is about social media influence which means to control most aspects of a viewer's life. Not all social media influencers give such little insight about themselves.

All I see with social media is someone will respond to an hour-long podcast taking out a few sections of it for talking points to try to say why their ideas are better. I don't agree with this format at all, and I get barely anything from these response videos. The response videos seem to be for influence and to repeat their same talking points they have said before, the response videos are not to inform. Back in 2010, a YouTube video response would last for over 20 minutes. Others will disagree that this is social media video responses in today's world.

Social media is dangerous for younger generations if I were to describe it. However, for us adults, I don't see much wrong done by it.

The public will make higher and higher claims thinking that will raise their status. They will use social media for this.

Social media is there for someone to be reinforced with what they believe through video after video.

Historical facts found in records by historians are now used for "influence" by the public. This is concerning.

The social media influencers are going to start rewriting beliefs such as democrat and conversative to get more influence. An example being a social media influencer will have conservative beliefs when he or she votes democratic. What this will do is make generations uneducated in the political field in some way.

The word "influence" will apply mostly to "social media influence" in the future.

The shorts on social media put out will be viewed as a source of information by the public. Often, these shorts are not a source of information.

Social media is there mostly for the public to try to get famous on it. The rest of it is used to share content ranging from long videos to shorts. Shorts are now the most common on social media.

Shorts are how social media influencers are getting famous.

On social media, someone can make a fake background for the vacation spot they go to making it look like something unrecognizable from the spot they are at. Shorts that are exposing these go viral.

What social media will do is make more disagreements amongst people watching videos of a person responding to someone else's short comment posted on social media. Videos of these sorts are going viral.

The social media influencers will keep putting out of shorts with their responses to videos that were years ago. These shorts go viral and then the social media influencers go viral. This is not a source of information.

I think social media will be nearly the same for the next 30 years. There probably will be one or two more platforms to use out of the six or so that get all the traffic.

There are over 64 million social media influencers in the world. That number will probably double within the next 15 years.

The social media influencers don't cite their sources for what shorts they put out as if they themselves came up with a take that they took from others.

Social media tries to get this moment people will share with others that their fans agree on.

Someone can keep trying on social media every year to market their shorts they put out. They can try new ideas of personalities.

I believe social media is making people more needy for attention with their need to share with others.

What could happen is much of the young adults follow these social media influencers as much as they possibly can. 10 years later, they grow out of it and become functioning members of society for their countries as if they never followed their social media influencers in the first place.

The public who use social media only buy material and go places to impress others on social media.

The social media influencers are going to use serious insults to people of other ideologies. It will go back and forth between two social media influencers and their followers.

One thing this generation messes up badly is how the social media influencers say they get “hate mail”, they put videos out insulting others for their beliefs.

Social media will be the most competitive industry, not only financially, in the near future.

When younger generations see social media, it tricks them into thinking famous people on it portray the lives they live. Take for instance politicians, most politicians are not easy to work with in America, all you will see on social media are politicians getting along with each other who are in the same party. This is the same for social media influencers, many have few friends.

Most of the social media influencers followers are making no more than 35k a year.

What is interesting about social media is that anyone can get famous in any state in America or any country in the world. This means there is no need to go to California where historically that was the only place in the world to get famous. California may get phased out for fame, I don’t believe so, I believe that California will be known much less for it.

iPhone users come up with the most unlikely reasons why they prefer an iPhone. People only buy new phone for upgrades on lens verses buying a set of professional cameras. I find this interesting.

Consumption will go up higher because people will go to fancy places to upload on their social media accounts to try to get ratings.

I would have never guessed McDonald’s would be protested back in the 2,000’s. McDonald’s was only boycotted because of social media. That is what social media does where McDonald’s would not have been protested if not for the large crowd on social media. This is the beginning of corporations being boycotted through social media. What I cannot understand is how the protests already knew which corporations supported which countries. I question if the protestors waited to boycott McDonald’s as of recent.

What will probably happen is social media influence will be repeated in the public when the public gives their opinion on matters.

With the responses to someone’s comment on social media, the responses are one or two sentences.

Social media is not going to tell people who go to places how many problems are at the places. The reviews given may be biased since an employee didn’t get along with a boss.

On social media, often times those who are famous delete their videos from years ago to make it seem like they didn’t have years of a small fanbase where those on YouTube were not watching where their following was small. Those who are famous on social media may have had 7 years’ worth of videos, they will delete 6 years’ worth of videos. It makes their YouTube channel seem like it is a bigger deal than it is. Viral since the beginning sells better than not viral since the beginning. TikTok channels that go viral years later will probably join in on this trend.

Something to consider is that the influencers get more views on fast food reviews even though prices are going up yearly at fast good.

To get a sense of how social media rewrites what it favors, the TV show South Park is talked about on social media frequently. The famous YouTuber TheAliKoca said about South Park that the TV show “jokes about everyone equally” and said that South Park is a comedy that is “unity and humor.” South Park is known for insulting people on it. South Park is considered funny because it is hypocritical where their characters are such awful people on it such as Eric Cartman and Kenny McCormick. It isn’t a TV show you would go telling coworkers at the workplace about.

One thing odd about those on social media is that the ones that are not rich any more used to buy the most expensive material. Now, those on social media go looking for material that is not expensive or once was expensive to showcase on social media.

There are countdowns for social media videos on YouTube as some sort of movie premiere. I am not sure why YouTube does this.

Social media influencers answer short questions with the longest answers. I don’t understand this.

Social media platforms are now being used to promote apps with someone putting out shorts that do not relate to the app at all to try to get people to use their apps.

There are many videos on social media of uneducated people being asked questions by social media influencers as some sort of interview. There are uneducated people in every country, why is a country highlighted for a few uneducated people that social media influencers go looking for?

During streams of professional shooter videogames, all you hear is players shooting their weapons on the game when the stream scrolls through the six to eight players on each team. Call of Duty is one of the games. You don’t want to hear that for hours.

On social media, there are social media influencers who call their channel a “TV show” or a “show”. They aren’t actual shows. This is not because their social media channels are not on a T.V. It is because their videos do not take hours to make, their videos are not on a script with a crew, there is barely any thought put into them. The social media influencers would have a lot of shows. The Kardashians are not an actual show.

Videogames such as Fortnite and several of the Call of Duty are fast paced. At times, too much goes on at once between building and shooting. If videogames get faster than Fortnite, I cannot follow what is going on. These are the videogames that are streamed the most as well.

All the shooter videogames look like cartoons now, that’s what the videogame shooters are aiming for. When I was growing up, there was one shooter videogame designed that way, it was Team Fortress 2 made by Steam in 2007.

There are shorts on social media that are repeated for political points people are trying to make whether democrat or American conservative.

There are reviews for social media content creators. Social media content creators aren’t giving a product. They are reposting other material for their fans to repost on social media.

On social media, someone can go viral for something that is blatantly obvious that many have already said months ago.

Apple sold their first iPhone in 2007 with 4GB storage and for $100 more with 8GB storage. 4GB was not enough storage at the time. The 8GB iPhone could not fit the storage for the apps today. I think what happened was Apple knew most of their customers who bought their iPhone needed 8GB storage, but Apple thought 4GB storage could be enough.

The fans of Apple are explaining how the new iPhone are becoming too large.

The iPhones have been the same for the last 5 years.

Because of social media, Andrew Tate can be in Romania and be famous instead of living in America or Britian where he previously lived. This is a way for countries to become well known because of this concept. I think it is a cool concept that social media offers that to countries.

On social media, users are trying to find tourist spots that get the most likes for photos and shorts taken by the spot.

Many of the shorts on social media have the person’s speaking dialogue over the short. Social media uses this for influence.

Podcasters who were in their 40’s and 50’s used to have most listeners in the 2,000’s. Now in 2024, there are many younger generation podcasters that have a share of the top viewership. This is a big deal.

The social media influencers only have a small amount of content their fanbases want to watch, they resort to laughing at other people’s videos and comments often.

The Xbox Series X and the Ps5 have no games. Every videogame looks and plays like Fortnite and Overwatch. There is nothing videogame players can do about it because the powerhouses in the videogame industry dominate the sales. Gamers have to wait for a game to come out that is different. Think of all the Twitch streaming that loses revenue from this. I would have never seen this coming playing videogames for years.

Hailey Jade has a podcast.

Many people on social media are selling e-books to scam their viewers into convincing them they will become famous if they buy their e-book. The social media scammers also sell “upgrades” for their e-books where they scam more money from their followers.

Both Family Guy and South Park have barely any watchers of their shows. This is when social media is at its highest usage.

Many of the people who watch social media are those on welfare who used to watch T.V. all day.

Everyone is starting a podcast. Even if someone had one conversation on social media that had 10k views, often times they think they can start a podcast.

It is difficult to become famous writing music. Possibly 0.2 percent will get famous off of writing music.

The gold-digger pranks are fake on social media.

Many of the “red pill” famous YouTubers are quitting social media. They are not making the money they were hoping for on social media. It isn’t just the “red pill” though it will be displayed that way on social media.

There are now several ads on Facebook.

Sneako has a much higher following since he has become a wahhab. I am not going to mention the famous social media influencers who can’t accept a famous social media influencer getting a higher following on social media.

The social media influencers who made mention of it felt that public must be informed of Sneako being viral on social media.

For those that were not on YouTube in 2008, there wasn’t a way to search for the top-rated YouTube channels. The top channels on YouTube were made up of their fans.

Many of the YouTubers who were famous in 2015 are making around 100 dollars to 300 dollars a month from YouTube’s ad revenue.

Because the start-up is around 100 to 300 dollars a month, this means most of the time it isn’t worth investing in a YouTube channel. Think of the cost of the equipment a YouTuber has to purchase.

YouTube is a joke. It would be like if you had 100 TV channels, and their channels were for episodes of family guy or like MLB if all the players were terrible at baseball.

What happens often is that those who get famous on social media enjoy it for a few years and then it becomes a job for them.

When I played videogames in 2004, a famous videogame player could not get anywhere near as famous as a famous videogame player is today.

There was a 2024 TikTok award ceremony.

There was something hysterical on social media where there is a social media account on Facebook where they repost game launches from 2011 and 2013 for the Xbox One and Gears of War three in 2024. The page has 24k likes.

Many on social media are interested in covering new food items that come out. The main social media channels cover the new restaurants that come out, there aren’t many new restaurants that come out.

One of the social media channels has around 750 shorts where he tried 750 different foods in 10 months. His social media channel name is ShoPhoCho, he has almost 700k subscribers YouTube. Plenty of his shorts are located in California. This means he has covered most restaurants in the country, and he’s covered the restaurants that are only in California. Also, it isn’t his full-time job. He has already covered it all.

Bobbi Althoff’s podcast failed in a year and a half.
